Neuroscientists have discovered that humans possess mirror neuron systems that may be associated with social development, self-awareness, emotional connection such as empathy, and intention. I suspect this is the mechanism an infants and children use to develop, what I term primary love templates. Everyone has entrained patterns that deserve celebration and others...reexamination. Without self-reflection we are likely to replay the same scenarios witnessed in our youth.

Primary love templates become protagonists and/or antagonists in our human drama and move us toward our destiny to discover what love is and what love is not. Idealistically, as adults we know what we want, have principles and pursue our dreams from a foundation of focused intention, heartfelt passion and disciplined behavior. Whether positive or negative, life provides mirrors, which help us see our reflection, discover our purpose and liberate us from recycling dysfunctional life scripts and ancestral templates.

All the positive or negative sensations we experience during our formative years are encrypted in neural circuits as forms of love. Similarly to the gravitational force on earth, mental patterns and the expectation of love are very compelling. We treat ourselves this way internally and externally treat others similarly from this first love template until we have a reason reexamine it. A primary love template has two phases of self-awareness:

The initial phase of the primary love template occurs when:

- As children, we accept the entire positive and negative milieu witnessed while growing up as normal, which becomes our primary love template.
- Every behavioral pattern, emotional reaction and mental belief system our parents/caregivers model is encoded into neural circuits and mirrored patterns and recycled internally and/or externally.
- We pass through the “second phase of awareness” as our models are hardwired into life scripts; we then proceed to treat ourselves in similar ways.

The crucial points of the second phase of the primary love template include:

- Parental models become prescriptive templates that we recycle internally. As adults, we treat ourselves in similar ways throughout life until we realize that we reproduced these templates within ourselves.
- As adults we then attract people, places and especially lovers that will mirror every spectacular and dysfunctional template buried within until we see their reflection, reach a resolution and address our illusions.

The second phase of self-awareness reminds us to appreciate our spectacular and dysfunctional scripts that were originally encrypted in our primary love template. Unraveling our own riddles and the illusions modeled by others is daunting.

This experiential workshop will address:

- Infantile, childish and adolescent stress responses
- Unproductive belief systems and mental monkeys
- Resolving and rewiring Primary Love Templates
- The qualities of an emotionally mature adult
